Prsentation de l'diteur Sick of Being Told When You Can Take a Bathroom Break? Is your day job bringing you down? Do you wish you could join the ranks of freelance writers but just dont believe its possible? Maybe youre retired but you hate the idea of being a Wal-Mart greeter. Maybe youre a stay at home mom who wants to make some cash while the kids are at school. Or maybe youve just always had a knack for writing and wonder if you could do it for a living. If youve ever dreamed of starting a career as a freelance writer, theres no better time than now. But how do you start? Isnt it scary to take that leap? Can You Really Make Money as a Writer? The short answer is yes. But where do you find clients? Do you have to have a niche? What is it really going to take to make this new career path work? You could take the hard road and figure things out along the way, wasting a lot of time in the process while you scramble to get all your ducks in a row. Or you could hire a coach so you know exactly what to do to start your writing career on the right foot but only if you have thousands of dollars to spend. Is there a third option that saves you time and money in your quest to write for a living? Write Well? Paid Well. Yes! Susan Anderson's You Write, They Pay gives freelance writers (and wannabe freelance writers) the tools to get their writing career going and the money rolling in now. You'll learn: how to approach projects when you don't think you know anything about the topic, how to get paid, how to get good clients (who pay you well!), and how to find work when you're just starting out. Learn how to make your writing dreams a reality today.

Biographie de l'auteur Susan Anderson started Triumph Communications in 2005 upon realizing this Internet thing was here to stay and that there sure was a lot of horrid content already clogging it up. She started off as a solo writer, creating so much highly rated content for clients that she rose to the top spot on Guru. That was enough to build some confidence and credibility, and she decided Triumph should serve more and better clients and that she couldn't do it alone. Switching to an agency model made bigger wins possible for the clients and the writers. Of course, now the hitch was finding great writers to add to the team. Seemed like the next logical step was to create a course to show others who love to write how to get paid for their words. Two birds, one stone! Her You Write, They Pay book and course has trained hundreds of freelance writers how to build businesses of their own and some of those students have become part of the Triumph team in the process. Even though she's a bit of a hermit, she's enjoyed presenting online and in-person training on freelance writing as part of Eben Pagan's Traffic School and Ignition programs and Coffee Shop Millionaire. She was even flown to Fiji to teach there. Susan splits her time between Huntsville, Alabama, and the Tri-Cities area of Eastern Tennessee. Mom to two teens and a small ark's worth of animals, she counts walking on fire and breaking a wooden arrow with her throat as piece-of-cake accomplishments in comparison. If she's not writing, she's probably taking a long walk with the love of her life, trying to convince her chickens to weed the garden, or wiping drool off of her 1959 Volkswagen Beetle Ragtop, Miss Mabel (built by said love of her life).
